

USABILITY AND REVISION REPORT

1. Usability

To summarize, they said I barely managed to fulfill all of the criteria. I had what was needed, but it wasn't that pleasant to look at. They offered that it might behoove me to add a splash of color or something in order to make it at least more interesting to look at. They thought the navigation was simple and to the point though and worked well for the simplicity I was going towards.

2. Revision

I actually ended up re-doing everything. I was not happy with how it looked and while I wanted it to be simple, what I had was TOO simple. (Almost lazily so) Besides, I wanted to showcase what little talent I have. So what you see now is a complete redesign. All of the graphics were not there before and I am at least somewhat satisfied now with how it looks. I took everything Marcus and Casey had to say and changed things. I added a different shade of grey to the homepage to at least give it that needed POP and proceeded to add the graphic design elements to the rest of the pages. This made it substantially more interesting to look at.

3. Process

The review was somewhat helpful. While I was thinking many of the things they said before they said them, hearing it from another mouth gave me the motivation to actually follow through and change things. While I tend to lean towards the mundanely simple, I realize that a lot of people like to have their eyes kept busy on a page. So while my group may not have drastically changed my processes, I will at least approach future designs with a different perspective.